Doubtless there are more people in that aggregation of suburbs known as Kansas City, Kansas, than in Topeka; but this city is still the metropolis of the state. Kansas City has no hotel worthy of the name, no morning newspaper, no business blocks of importance, none of the marks of an independent city. How can a community of that kind be compared with a vigorous modern city like Topeka or Wichita?

The agricultural papers talk about "di-versified agriculture," and exhort the farmer not to put all his eggs in one bas-ket. This is the voice of financial wisdom; but it may be urged that this diversification is necessary to a cultivation of the sentiment of affection toward certain spot on earth which we call the love of home. It is impossible to fall in love with a quarter-section on which nothing is raised but corn or wheat.

We have had in Kansas, everybody knows, a "sugar boom." It has cost the government, the state, and individuals a good deal of money, and the peculiar and special Kansas curse who commits bond frauds has drawn his brush over the industry in places. It is to be hoped that some day Kansas sorghum sugar will be relieved of every article of the fraud taste, and stand among the mrecognized as one of the resources of the state But it would be better news to hear that every farmer in the state was making his own sorghum molasses; and a smoke house on every farm would do more for Kansas than any number of packing houses likely to be built. We hear of protection to home indus-try to be obtained through legislation. The man who framed the words "ad People in Kansas are superstitious about astra per aspera" was not forgotten in the legislation. They regard it as a magiliquors can be poured—and it is like it in being a trick—but the carter who called on Hercules to lift the cart out of the mud had a forehead six feet high and three feet wide compared to the man who imagines that Kansas legislature can protect anybody or anything. The man who would do the best for the Kansas home must adopt the Mill creek, the "Dutch" idea if you choose, and make every farm house a self-provisioned for-tress of industry that can stand any siege hard times may bring against it.
